

Earth's Biosphere

- The biosphere is the part of Earth that can support life.
- It includes all of the land, air, and water where living things can be found.
- It is made up of many different habitats and ecosystems, such as forests, deserts, oceans, and more.
- Animals, plants, and other living organisms all rely on the biosphere to survive.
- The biosphere also helps to regulate climate, clean the air and water, and cycle nutrients.
- Humans have an impact on the biosphere and can cause harm if they do not take care of it.
